Movie events:

If you're thinking of screening a movie, you'll almost certainly require a licence. That is unless of course you, or someone you know, owns the rights to the movie. In which case, you'll need to provide us with proof that no licence will be required. As a guide for screening a movie, you'll be looking at fees starting at around £99.60*. This isn't something we charge. This is a fee set by Filmbank Media, who authorise the public screening of movies in the UK. If you're charging people to see the movie, then Filmbank will want to know the number of people who came to see it, and will charge a percentage based on the ticket sales. You will be expected to pay all fees associated with this. You'll also be required to supply the media that you wish to have screened.
